Historical Information

Rice, Barton & Fales, Inc., established in 1867, was the successor to a series of companies engaged in the manufacture of paper and pulp mill and textile machinery:

Howe & Goddard, established in 1837, became

Goddard, Rice & Co., ca. 1847, became

Rice, Barton & Co., 1862, became

Rice, Barton & Fales Machine and Iron Co., 1867, changed name to

Rice, Barton & Fales, Inc., 1922-

George S. Barton was President of the corporation from 1862 until his death in 1891. He was succeeded by his son, Charles S. Barton, who served as President until his death in 1914. He was succeeded by his son, George S. Barton who assumed the offices of President and Treasurer in 1914. Throughout its history, the company has specialized in building paper-making and textile printing machinery, although at various times in its history it has built a number of different types of machinery, including steam boilers, hydraulic presses, and other lines.

The location of the original 1837 plant was in downtown Worcester. This facility remained in use through the several reorganizations until 1892, when a new facility was opened on a site in the – at that time – undeveloped southern part of the city. This facility on Southgate Street, enlarged and modernized, remains in use today.

Scope and Content

The Rice, Barton and Fales records illustrate the development and growth of the company, including its predecessors, from the mid-1840s to the end of the 19th century, with scattered records as late as the 1930s. The collection includes some 30 ledgers, daybooks, letter books, order books, and other record keeping books, which provide a history of the growth and development of the company, as well as providing insight into the record keeping practices of the 19th century. In particular the letter books provide examples of the copying of manuscript letters by letterpress, a process for manuscript copying devised around 1840. Record keeping works also include plans, specifications, and costs of much of the machinery developed and built by the company.

The collection also includes personal and household accounts of Charles S. Barton and his family between 1896 and 1901. Charles S. Barton was company president from 1891 until his death in 1914. This aspect of the collection provides insight into the social life and customs of the well-to-do families of Worcester at the end of the 19th century.

The collection is arranged topically, and is described to folder level (item level for bound volumes.)
