Biographical Information

The Green family of Worcester is well-known for its public service and contributions to the city. Less well-known locally are the accomplishments of Andrew Haskell Green, who was the force behind the consolidation of New York City one hundred years ago. In 1868 Andrew Haswell Green conceived the idea of consolidation of the five boroughs, Manhattan, Bronx, Brooklyn, Queens, Richmond, into a single political entity, the City of New York. For the next thirty years he worked to make this vision a reality. In addition, he oversaw the construction of Central Park in New York, and the creation of the New York Public Library.
