Historical/Biographical Notes

In 1871 Franklin Wesson and G. H. Harrington began the manufacture of a shell-ejecting revolver, patented by Harrington. Harrington purchased Wesson's interest in 1874 and began a partnership with William A. Richardson under the name Harrington & Richardson. In 1888 the partnership was dissolved, and the company incorporated under the name Harrington & Richardson Arms Company. The company was granted several patents for improvements to revolvers during the latter 1800s. Beginning in 1899 the company also manufactured shotguns, handcuffs, and related products. The company was also a major producer of military weapons, notably the Garand rifle of World War II. The company relocated to Gardner in 1973.

Scope and Content

The collection is comprised of catalogs of company products, 1906-1970s; a brief history of the development of firearms; and clippings, photocopies, and other documents highlighting the company's history and activities from ca. 1907 to 1970s.
