Historical/Biographical Notes

Henry Dwight Simonds was born in 1850, son of Elijah Simonds and Eunice Eliza Walker. The family moved to Worcester in 1853. Henry attended local schools and at an early age began work in the grocery business. He attended business college in Worcester, and stayed in business for some years, before returning to school to complete his education. He was active in the Methodist church, and became a Methodist preacher, filling in for area clergy. He resumed his college preparatory education at Wesleyan Academy (which he called Methodist Academy, presumably a nickname) in Wilbraham, Mass., in preparation for a career as a Methodist minister, a career which he apparently never pursued. Wesleyan Academy later became Wilbraham Academy, today's Monson Wilbraham Academy, a private coeducational boarding school.

Scope and Content

The collection consists of a typescript written by Simonds including personal and family reminiscences, stories of growing up in Worcester, and his memoirs from an early age through his leaving Worcester to attend Wesleyan Academy in Wilbraham. The typescript covers the years of his life from ca. 1850 to ca. 1875.
